The Mission Bay Pump Station project is anticipated to employ approximately 140 people from construction trades and will help to keep engineers, architects, contractors and subcontractors employed (some of the hardest hit sectors of employment during the recession). The infrastructure being funded provides long term economic benefits by facilitating additional development activity, including the estimated $65.5 million construction of 150 units of affordable housing and the estimated $5.4 million development of 1.5 acres of parks and open space that serve these units.
 The adaptive reuse of the Central YMCA into 172 units of housing for chronically homeless individuals will include a state of the art Health Clinic for formerly homeless persons both from this project and other supportive housing in San Francisco, providing an extraordinary level of support and care for this vulnerable population.
